Research School @ Tradition

Monday, January 23rd	The Neptune Project gamification trailer will be broadcast to students after morning announcements, to build interest and excitement about the upcoming reading/writing challenges. Mysterious signs have already been posted around the school to capture students' attention.
Tuesday, January 24th	Students will embark on their first mission - to persuade at least 20 members from their classroom pod area to join their team. Student sign-ups will take place.
Wednesday, January 25th	Students will complete their second mission - using clues from Sunshine State Reader Books, students will decode the identity of a mystery staff member who can unlock the secret of their team name.
Thursday, January 26th	Students will work on their third mission - together, team members will draft a team banner design and craft their pod team banner using provided supplies.
Friday, January 27th	Student teams will begin competing against other teams to earn "XP" points for successful completion of reading/writing missions, challenges, and tasks focused on the various Sunshine State Reader Books, as well as separate, specific challenges based solely upon Polly Holyhoke's book, The Neptune Project . This gamification project will continue through March 8th, when the winning pod team will be announced.
